

Lead Your Own Life

It seems as if some people were just born to lead. The reality, though, is that leadership skills need to be nurtured --- whether you're ~~Nelson Mandela~~ or a freshman in high school. Figuring out how can be a tough job, but it all begins by establishing a strong sense of self. Your character or sense of self reflects your looks, attitudes, thoughts, feelings, and beliefs towards yourself and others in the world. In this paper, you will be able to define your own values, identify your role models, know your strengths and weaknesses, state your achievements and future goals, and reveal your decisions in life that develop your character of who you really are and want to be this year and in the future. Make sure you organize your thoughts and support your ideas with examples, situations, and life experiences throughout the paper.

Remember to write a rough draft and keep revising your work, as the reader will want a polished paper. Don't forget to use the writing process, the writing traits, and use formal language when writing. The paper must be written in ink or typed, no pencil. You will turn in the rough draft with the final draft. If you do not have a rough draft with the final draft, your grade will be affected. The final draft will be on top and the rough draft stapled behind it.
